Plenary Session Two: Policy options for the promotion of the new forms of FDI, Case Studies and Best Practices

New forms of investment (NFI) are becoming increasingly important and taking different shapes and types. They range from minority joint ventures, management contracts in manufacturing and farming, sub-contracting, service out-sourcing, franchising and licensing. What are the policies that promote and facilitate such investments and best practices therein? What view to be taken of these new forms of investment from the development policy aspect? What are the implications on employment, job creation, technology and skills development, export generation as well as social and environmental impacts? These are some of the issues this session will be examining in an effort to shed light on these New Forms of Investment (NFI) and explore the benefits as well as the potential negative effects that can result from such investments.

In host countries, a clearly-defined strategy and the right mix of policy instruments and business conditions are needed to welcome NFIs. The session will discuss and draw lessons from successful cases studies to highlight best practice policy frameworks for enhancing

Plenary Session Three: New Corporate Strategies to Penetrate Markets, Rationale and New Rules of the Game

The global landscape of the post global economic and financial crisis has changed dramatically as international competition has increased and sluggish growth had its toll on investment and trade flows worldwide. There are new emerging forms of international investment. New forms of investment (NFI) have developed, which constitute a departure from full ownership of the capital by the foreign investor. International enterprises are devising new modes of operation in their cross-border activities and broadening their investment models through the conclusion of minority joint ventures, management contracts in manufacturing and farming, sub-contracting, service out-sourcing, franchising and licensing to name a few examples.

What are these new forms of investment and what are drivers and determinants pushing international enterprises to undertake these new production modes of operation and new ways to penetrate markets? The session will shed light on some of these important emerging business models and highlight some of the implications on growth and development.

Plenary Session Eight: New Incentive Packages to Attract NFIs, Effectiveness and Impact

This session will be moderated by Investment Consulting Associates (ICA). The role of incentives in attracting FDI has become a hot topic among policy makers, business leaders and academia. Within governments the focus is on the one hand on political debates about revenue foregone versus economic development while business leaders often emphasize that incentives can play a role in the final stages of an investment decision. This panel highlights some recent developments in putting financial and fiscal incentives in place for attracting the new forms of international investment. It also focuses on the investor's experience in identifying potential incentives that can be developed and the role governments play in this process.
